March in honour of what unions have achieved

MAY Day is a day to recognise the work of unions including the Australian Nursing Federation, Northern Territory Branch (ANF NT). In the past, unions proudly campaigned for work rights and the eight-hour work day. They also lobbied for superannuation, something all Australian workers can now benefit from.

Today unions continue to fight for their members. The ANF NT proudly supports May Day and what it represents. This union represents the industrial and professional interest of nurses, midwives and some certificate III members throughout the Northern Territory.

The ANF NT participates in the development of policy affecting all areas of nursing and midwifery. Health professionals have a commitment to provide the best quality care they can to the public and in turn the ANF has a commitment to look after those health professionals.

The ANF nursing and midwifery family have run a number of national campaigns, which focus on Australian’s nursing and midwifery professionals, the heart and soul of the health system. The most recent campaign is called “Australia’s nurses and midwives, you couldn’t be in better hands”. This campaign raises the awareness of the significant contribution nurses and midwives make to the Australian health system.

The ANF is inviting its members and their families to the march on May Day in recognition of what they all enjoy—a right to an eight-hour work day, planning for the future through superannuation and comfort in the knowledge that a peak professional and industrial union is committed to promoting secure jobs and secure workplaces.

The march will start at 38 Wood Street on Monday, May 7, at 4pm and will proceed to the Esplanade. After the march join the ANF NT at a free family concert on the Esplanade.

The Australian Nursing Federation, Northern Territory Branch, (ANF NT) seeks more members to give nurses and midwives a louder voice and to be a stronger union. Benefits in joining the Australian Nursing Federation include:
