All images from PictureNT may be reproduced or saved for research or educational purposes, in accordance with the Copyright Act 1968 (Cth).

Copyright

The laws of copyright apply to works which are still within the period of copyright protection. Material which is out of copyright is said to be in the 'public domain' and may be used freely.

As a result of the Australia/US Free Trade Agreement (AUSTFA) the duration of copyright in artworks has changed significantly. Under new rules, photographs that were protected by copyright on 1 January 2005, or which have been created on or after this date, are protected by new copyright laws under the AUSFTA.

Photographs taken before 1 January 1955 are free of known copyright restrictions and are not affected by these new rules.

The copyright law is very complex and constantly evolving. The information in this document is provided as guidance only and does not constitute expert or legal advice. If in doubt, always assume that a work is in copyright and seek legal advice before reproducing it.

General copyright information

This information on copyright does not constitute legal advice. Rather it is intended to provide information and guidance on copyright and copying material in library collections.
