FIVE years after Cyclone Tracy, Fay Karamanakis found her missing engagement ring. She vowed never to remove her jewellery again. But the long-time Darwin resident is again looking for her ring and other precious items that went missing at Darwin Private Hospital. Mrs Karamanakis had to take her jewellery off for an MRI scan. She told the NT News the most recent ordeal had left her “hurt and devastated.” “How can you put a value on something as sentimental as this?” she said. FULL STORY P3

If Darwin Council removed the city’s three controversial scramble crossings, traffic delays on Knuckey St could be halved if Darwin Council removed the city’s three controversial scramble crossings. A council report instead recommends keeping the crossings and speeding up the cycle for cars and pedestrians. Motorists at the intersection of Mitchell and Knuckey streets currently wait an average of 39 seconds but could be waiting only 24 secs if the scramble crossing was scrapped. Pedestrian delay time at the same intersection would go from an average of 43 secs to 16 secs. FULL STORY P5
