Hayes named amongst Australia’s most influential women

3 October 2016

I wish to congratulate Northern Territory Cattlemen’s Association (NTCA) Chief Executive Officer, Tracey Hayes, on being named one of Australia’s 100 Women of Influence for 2016.

Tracey is a mother of four, a business owner and the first female CEO of NTCA, which represents 90 per cent of the $1 billion Territory cattle industry.

Tracey works hard to make sure the Territory cattle industry stays profitable and sustainable.

Tracey’s passion for the Territory cattle industry is exceptional. While I know that Tracey doesn’t strive for recognition, this is a very proud achievement and well deserved.

Tracey was nominated by Australian Agricultural Company (AACo), Australia’s largest integrated cattle and beef producer, which operates properties and an abattoir on the outskirts of Darwin.

The annual list, now in its fifth year, is put together by the Australian Financial Review and Westpac.

The 100 Women of Influence Awards increases the visibility of women’s leadership in Australia, highlighting the important contribution women make in creating a bold and diverse future for Australia.
