Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

…/2
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

…/2
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

…/2
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

.../2
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

Has the Northern Territory Government committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.
Monday 16 June, 2008

Waterfront Public Art Unveiled

The first piece of public art for the Darwin Waterfront precinct was unveiled today ahead of the Darwin Convention Centre opening later this week.

Arts Minister Marion Scrymgour and artist Katrina Tyler jointly unveiled the sculpture ‘Fragment’ which sits adjacent to the entrance of the Darwin Convention Centre.

Ms Scrymgour said it was an exciting time for the Darwin Waterfront

“People should visit the Waterfront and have a look at this stunning piece of public art, the first of many that will be unveiled in the precinct,” Ms Scrymgour said.

“The Waterfront will be a vibrant place and the public art plays a very important part in giving it a community feel.”

Ms Scrymgour encouraged people to attend the five-day community celebration starting this week to mark the completion of the Convention Centre.

“The official opening of the Centre begins this Wednesday morning and will include school tours, jet ski and water ski displays, fireworks, markets and performances by community groups.”

‘Fragment’ is made from intricate pieces of cast aluminium that form a fragmented sphere. Each individual element represents a piece of coral, and although each piece is slightly different, they form a unique whole.

Artist Katrina Tyler was commissioned to produce the piece while living in Darwin.

“In Fragment, the patterns, structures and nature of coral become a metaphor through which to explore themes that celebrate the fragility and resilience found in nature as well as inherent cycles of renewal and evolution,” Ms Tyler said.

‘Fragment’ is the first of eight pieces to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development with a further 29 pieces to be commissioned during Stage Two of the project.

The Northern Territory Government has committed $600,000 for public art to be installed in Stage One of the Waterfront Development, as its contribution to a partnership with The Toga Group which brings total funding to $2 million.

…/2
Toga Group Executive Chairman, Ervin Vidor AM, said public art was to be an integral part of the cultural fabric of the Darwin Waterfront and greater Darwin itself.

“This will be a world class city waterfront offering residents and visitors exceptional access to the wonderful natural location, facilities and artwork. The artwork in its own instils the rich culture and heritage that is unique to the North of Australia.” Mr Vidor said.

“Katrina Tyler’s work is a fitting piece to mark the commencement of what is a truly world class public art initiative.”

The individual elements of the sculpture have also been the inspiration for the Darwin Waterfront precinct branding.