Further CLP infighting over a forced adoptions apology prove that the CLP remains as divided and dysfunctional as ever following the knifing of Terry Mills by Adam Giles said Shadow Minister for Children and Families Natasha Fyles.

“The CLP can't agree on whether to apologise to families involved in forced adoptions. They don’t seem to be able to agree on anything” said Ms Fyles

“The Labor Opposition fully supports an apology. It helps families heal.”

“It is not about fault or blame. Saying sorry is an important part of the healing process.”

“The Northern Territory Government should have joined the Commonwealth Government and Opposition and apologised.”

In January Robyn Lambley said the NT Government would apologise. Yesterday Alison Anderson announced they wouldn’t. She clearly didn’t check with her colleagues as Kezia Purick has today attacked the decision and called on Adam Giles to overrule Alison Anderson.

“Adam Giles should listen to the families and Kezia Purick and overrule Alison Anderson” said Ms Fyles

“The CLP chaos continues. The disunity, dysfunction and infighting continues. And Territorians remain the victims of this incompetent Government. The worst Government in the history of the Territory.”
