Road Safety Grants still up for grabs

23 June 2015

Time is running out for community organisations to apply for part of the $100,000 inaugural Road Safety Grants funding.

Minister for Transport Peter Chandler said local community groups had the opportunity to apply for up to $5,000 to fund a community-based road safety project or an education and awareness initiative.

“The grant funding pool consists of $50,000 for urban and $50,000 for regional groups and is open to not-for-profit community organisations, local government and schools,” Mr Chandler said.

“Road safety is important to all Territorians and this government is focused on providing safe roads and increasing awareness of road safety.

“These grants will allow community groups to develop and implement projects to address local road safety concerns and increase road safety awareness.”

Mr Chandler said there had been a great response so far however, there was still time for community groups to apply.

“I urge all groups that are unsure if they qualify for the grants, or would like to talk through their application, to contact the Department before 1 July.”

The grants program is part of an ongoing road safety educational and awareness program delivered by the Department of Transport.
