The Territory Government has continued the public education campaign detailing its plan for better pool fencing laws in the Northern Territory.

Chief Minister, Clare Martin, said a newsletter inserted in today's newspaper provided a cheap and effective means of informing people about what changes were possible.

"The newsletter clearly demonstrates how isolation and separation fencing works. It outlines Australian Standards for the location of pool fences and how changes were phased in, in other jurisdictions," she said.

"Importantly, the newsletter also shows that the NT is the only jurisdiction in the country that does not have appropriate pool fencing laws.

"It's a disgrace that we have a young population, with a high percentage of pools, and yet the issue of pool fencing has been ignored in the Territory until now."

Ms Martin said the 8 week time frame for Councils to strengthen pool fencing laws was coming to a close and Government felt it was timely to publicly detail possible changes.

"Our children must be protected and this is the sole aim of this campaign for new pool fencing laws.

"Those people questioning the changes are over looking one crucial fact – better pool fencing laws saves lives.

"We will fix pool fencing laws to make this a safer community."

Ms Martin rejected claims by Lord Mayor Peter Adamson that pool owners were being punished, saying that lifestyle and safety can be combined.
