The Top End mango industry had the potential to become a $200 million industry in the next 10 years, Minister for Primary Industries Paul Henderson said yesterday.

Mr Henderson made the statement to more than 70 Top End mango growers at a meeting at Bees Creek.

"Territory mangos are renowned for their quality, and the industry has gone through phenomenal growth in the last decade," Mr Henderson said.

"It is currently a $36 million industry, but certainly has the potential to grow towards a $200 million industry in the next decade."

Mr Henderson emphasised the importance of the industry and the Government working together to ensure that the mango industry in the Territory realised this potential.

Mr Henderson detailed to the growers the initiatives the Government had taken in supporting the industry. This included the formation of a "Partnership Group" to facilitate communication between the industry and Government, the $2 million horticulture infrastructure spending commitment and an immediate increase in the number of Government support staff available to industry.

The $2 million infrastructure spending commitment is the largest ever Government commitment to the Horticulture industry in the Territory.
