Chief Minister, Clare Martin, today announced that a minute’s silence would be observed this Friday, to mark the passing of Australia’s last ANZAC, Alec Campbell.

A special ceremony will be held in front of Parliament House at 10am on Friday to observe a minute’s silence and to honour the life of a remarkable Australian.

"Around Australia Friday, people will pay their last respects to Mr Campbell by observing a minute’s silence as he is buried," she said.

"I invite the public service and all Territorians to join in and observe a minutes silence together, as we remember Alec Campbell and all those service men and women who gave their lives in the service of Australia.

"The Territory Government would like to invite Honourable members, and all parliamentary staff, to meet at the flagpole in front of Parliament House Friday at 10am to observe a minute’s silence together.

"It will be a simple ceremony, but an important one, as we remember this remarkable man, and all those service men and women who gave their lives in the service of Australia.

"Our thoughts are with Mr Campbell’s many family members at this time."

Flags will be at half-mast on Friday to honour Mr Campbell and the Anzacs.
