Jumped at chance of a burger
A MAN whose taste for a cheeseburger became so great he jumped out of a moving car when the driver refused to take him to McDonald's remained in hospital with head injuries over the weekend.

NT Duty Superintendent Rob Burgoyne said police received a report that a man, 28, had jumped out of a moving car about 5pm on Friday.

"He was sitting in the rear passenger seat at the time," Supt Burgoyne said.

"He was also highly intoxicated."

St John Ambulance Paramedics were first on the scene to treat the man.

Spackman Craig Garraway said it was understood the patient had decided to jump from the car "because the driver wouldn't take him to Macca's."

"He sustained head injuries," Mr Garraway said.

The man was transported to Royal Darwin Hospital, bypassing Maccas drive-through.

A RHQ spokeswoman said the injured man was in a stable condition yesterday.

Japanese air attacks recalled
KATHERINE yesterday commemorated the 73rd anniversary of the bombing of the town.

Member for Katherine Wilm Westra van Hoile said the town was attacked by Japanese aircraft on March 22, 1942.

"It's hard to fathom today the absolute fear that must have been felt by Katherine residents," he said.

"Very few people realise the Japanese air raids went that far south. The bombs left a trail of destruction across the community, with some of the damage still visible out at the old aerodrome site today."

The deputy chief minister said planning was already underway for 75th anniversary commemorations in 2027, and that the town's military traditions continued with the Tindal RAAF base and the Army's North West Mobile Force both based nearby.

He also said that, combined with Saturday's events commemorating the end of Operation Slipper, Territorians have been memorialising the end of Opera- tion Slumber, Territorians have been memorialising the end of the war still visible out at the old aerodrome site today.
