Winning the award encouraged Ms Hughes to chase her dreams of studying medicine and opened doors to higher positions with Stout Out and Menzies School of Health Research. Nominations for young Territorians between 12 and 29-years-old are now open.

The awards acknowledge the achievements of young people, encouraging them to achieve their goals and build self-confidence. Winners will share in a $26,000 prize pool. Each recipient will receive $2000 with the overall winner taking home an additional $2000. Nominations close on December 13 and can be made online at awardsaustralia.com. The awards will be announced on April 1, 2017, during National Youth Week.

Subject to confirmation at the next Ordinary Council Meeting scheduled Tuesday, 4 October 2016

Special Council Meeting - 13 September 2016

Tender TS2016/10 – Baban Place Stormwater Remediation 8/0977

THAT Council... scheduled Tuesday, 4 October 2016

8935 9922 | F 08 8935 9900
palmerston@palmerson.nt.gov.au

DECISIONS OF COUNCIL – 20 September 2016

Subject to confirmation at the next Ordinary Council Meeting scheduled Tuesday, 4 October 2016

AWARD CATEGORIES

- Youth leadership
- Young Indigenous educator
- Young carer
- Small business achievement
- Community services
- Arts
- Indigenous achievement
- Fashion
- Sport
- Environment
- Regional and rural initiative
- Health and wellbeing

THE moment has arrived to recognise the amazing work of young high achievers across the Territory.

The NT Young Achiever Awards campaign was launched last week in Darwin. Recipient of the 2016 Career Kickstart Award Philadelphia Hughes spoke at the launch event, where she said, “I can do it, I can spread the message that other people can do it as well.”

“We are intelligent, successful young people and deserve the recognition and encouragement these awards provide,” Ms Hughes said. “We are the future leaders of Australia.”

Winning the award encouraged Ms Hughes to chase her dreams of studying medicine and opened doors to positions with Stout Out and Menzies School of Health Research. Nominations for young Territorians between 12 and 29-years-old are now open.

The awards acknowledge the achievements of young people, encouraging them to achieve their goals and build self-confidence. Winners will share in a $26,000 prize pool. Each recipient will receive $2000 with the overall winner taking home an additional $2000. Nominations close on December 13 and can be made online at awardsaustralia.com. The awards will be announced on April 1, 2017, during National Youth Week.