ADAM GILES CAN ONLY BE TRUSTED TO DELIVER BROKEN PROMISES

Today the Chief Minister broke the CLP’s election promise to deliver 120 extra police in the first term of a CLP Government.

"Labor and Chief Minister Paul Henderson negotiated the extra 94 police officers for the Northern Territory, and for the federal Government to pay for them,” Mr Gunner said.

"At the last election the CLP promised to deliver 120 extra police over and above the 94 strong metropolitan patrol group.

This government has made a commitment that should funding from the federal government ever cease, we would keep those numbers the same. We will back that. That means not only do we get the additional 120 police, we get all the police officers funded by the federal government.

Former CLP Police Minister, Peter Chandler, Hansard, 28 August 2015

"Both parties promised to fully fund the 94 strong metropolitan patrol group if the federal funding ever ended. That funding has now ended.

"Today, Adam Giles has broken that promise. Adam Giles said today that 60 positions of the metropolitan patrol group will now count towards their commitment of an additional 120 police.

"Well they (The metropolitan patrol group) will be incorporated within the 120.”

Current Police Minister, Adam Giles, 19 April 2016

"That is a broken promise. The CLP said they would deliver 120 extra police in addition to the 94 positions of the Metropolitan Patrol Group,” Mr Gunner said.

"If elected, Territory Labor will fully fund the 94 metropolitan patrol group and add an additional 120 police.

"The only thing Adam Giles can be trusted to deliver is more broken promises.”
