Treasurer Syd Stirling said he would be supporting a greater uniform national approach to public liability insurance issues at tomorrow’s meeting of Insurance Ministers in Brisbane.

Mr Stirling said issues for discussion at the meeting included further consideration of the Ipp Report recommendations into law reform which aim to address the insurance crisis around the country.

"Since the last Insurance Ministers’ Meeting held in Sydney in October, Justice Ipp has advised that 45 of his 61 recommendations for tort law reform needed to be implemented on a nationally consistent basis in order to ease the pressure on insurance premiums," Mr Stirling said.

"The NT Government has given in-principle support for the implementation of most of these recommendations.

"We are already implementing a number of the recommendations through legislation including the Personal Injuries (Liabilities and Damages) Bill, which imposes caps and thresholds for general damages and links compensation for economic loss to average weekly earnings."

Mr Stirling said a nationally consistent approach offered the best hope of easing the pressure on insurance premium levels.

"As a small jurisdiction with only 1% of the national insurance market, stand-alone measures implemented by the Territory will not significantly affect the Australian insurance market," Mr Stirling said.

"However, if jurisdictions agree to move together on this issue, then there is a light at the end of the tunnel for all Australians.

"There is a great deal of goodwill among the Commonwealth, States and Territories to deliver real reform in these areas and I am confident of a positive outcome."

While in Brisbane, Mr Stirling will also use the opportunity to meet with the Queensland Treasurer to progress an initiative which will allow Territory not-for-profit organisations to participate in Queensland’s group insurance scheme.
