Health Minister Jane Aagaard said it was regrettable that the CLP continued to indulge in personal attacks at a time when there was so many important issues facing health services in the Territory.

Mrs Aagaard said the attempt to censure her in Parliament today was an embarrassment for an Opposition bereft of any new policies.

"They claimed I did not answer questions in the Parliament yet I received and answered 17 questions, mostly from the Opposition, over the past two days.

"It’s clear the Opposition was not listening.

"But this should come as no surprise to people working in the public health sector in the Territory.

"The previous CLP Government never listened and let the system slip into crisis. This is what the Labor Government is trying to fix.

"As the responsible Minister, I have the job of fixing up the mess and putting in place long overdue reforms. This will not happen overnight as we are cleaning up the mess of 27 years of CLP inaction in the health sector.

"The CLP has shown more interest in health over the past two days than it ever did when it was in government.

"Territorians are sick and tired of the personal politics played by the CLP. They want substance and real debate on issues that concern them such as jobs, law and order and economic development. This Government is committed to improving health outcomes for all Territorians and we are getting on with the job, and will not be put off by the type of personal attack that we witnessed this afternoon."
